

Why isn't AIMSweb Behavior addressing more intensive intervention at tier 3?

AIMSweb is a screening and progress monitoring assessment system intended for the general education population. However, in addition to benchmarking all students, AIMSweb is very well suited to progress monitor students in Tier 3 or Special Education.

Pearson has a wide variety of high quality diagnostic tests and in-depth interventions to meet the needs of special student populations.

We included some of our existing classroom behavior intervention resources into AIMSweb Behavior as a value-add. Students who are severely at risk of behavioral issues should be further evaluated by a behavioral specialist or school psychologist, and use the appropriate clinical assessments and interventions that are specifically designed for that population.
